FOREIGN FASHIONS DISGUST VISITORS

NEW YORK, Sept. 8.—While Paul Poiret, the famous French designer, is propering to leave these shores, because he has been unable to find any new or interesting American style ideas, Anseim Frankel, of Des Moines, Iowa, president of the National Association of Retail Ciothires, just back from a trip through Europe, is feasting his aesthetis senses, starved by the ugitness of old world fashions, on the splendors of American clothes.

M. Poiret left his studios in the Faubourg-St. Honore, open minded and eager to understand what the ladies who patronize his Paris shops wear eager to understand what the ladies who patronize his Paris shops wear when they are home. But he was disappointed, it appears, for he says: "I wanted to see these American designs to take them back with me. But I did not find any such designs."

Mr. Frankei did not have any greater success "over there" than M. Poiret had over here. Also, open-minded, he meandered around the fashionable sections of cities in England, France. Belgium and Gormany and crytically summed up his estimate of European taste by saying:

"I wouldn't give $10 for any suit I saw over there."

It won't be the first time that Major Morgan undertook a transoceanic flight. He was associated with Captain F. P. Raynham in the latter's unsuccessful attempt to fly from Newfoundland to Ireland in May, 1919.

During the war, Major Morgan served with the Royal Naval Air Service and won many decorations for bravery. He was wounded in a bomb explication and lost his foot.

Accompanying him on his new venture will be Captain H. P. Hasiam, an Australian aviator and an American wireless operator. The airplane will have a cruising radius of 3,000 and a maximum speed of 150 miles an hour.
